Setting up a physical war room for facilitation

- Find a location that will spark creativity and that will take the participants out of their comfort zones.
- The room should be dedicated to the whole sprint work.
- Ensure the room has a lot of wall space you can use or add stand-alone display boards to add more wall surfaces.
- Room should have moveable tables and every team should have their own table.
- Have sufficient space to move around.
- Have sufficient daylight coming into the room.
- Print the templates large scale, minimum A1 size.
- Create different corners on the walls for different stages of the sprint.
- When setting up the room, build a story
- The door to the room should always be open to guests for feedback and inputs.
- Always have candy in the room.
